25,000 Employees To Be Asked About Sources Of Income

WASHINGTON, March 18 — (AP)—Newbold Morris faced more trouble from irate congressmen Tuesday as he set out to ask 25,000 higher-paid government officials to list their sources of income.

The mailing of questionnaires to the 25,000 signaled the launching of Morris' widely-heralded search for corruption in the government. He called a news conference for late Tuesday to unveil details of the questionnaire.

Morris has made clear government officials receiving the quiz sheet have no choice about filling it out, short of resigning.

He said if anyone refuses to give the desired information on outside income and is not fired, he himself will quit. And President Truman has called on the entire executive branch to give Morris full cooperation.

Meanwhile, chairman McCarran (D-Nev) summoned his Senate Judiciary Committee into closed session and announced he would urge it to reject Truman's request that Morris be given power to seize records and summon witnesses.

MCCARRAN SAID he would vote such powers only for some cleanup man appointed subject to Senate approval—and with safeguards for congressional investigative powers. McCarran contended Morris had shown "utter disrespect" for Congress and the people who elect its members.

The Nevada senator was one of several lawmakers who expressed resentment over Morris' hot tempered testimony last week before a committee questioning him about his profitable side deals and his "Red China" connections.

Morris accused some senators of showing "diseased minds" in their questioning and he called Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis) a character destroyer.

The President appointed Morris, a New York Republican, on Feb. 1 to cleanse the government of wrongdoers. The corruption crusher has been under fire since, principally from Republicans.

Sen. Jenner (R-Ind), a judiciary committee member, declared that he would back McCarran's turnaround demand.

"Any such power," Jenner said, "should be entrusted only to someone appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The way Morris has been blowing his top around here, he's not apt to ever get confirmed."

COLUMBUS, March 18 — (AP)—Western Union Telegraph Co. says it will comply promptly if the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio orders it to discontinue six racing news circuits it still leases to Ohio subscribers.

The utility indicated there will be little argument at a PUCO hearing on the bookie business in Ohio, which opens Wednesday. PUCO ordered Western Union to show cause why it should not be required to shut off all race wire service in Ohio.

Obscure Gravedigger Being Held For Threatening Slain Tipster

NEW YORK, March 18 — (AP)—An elderly, obscure gravedigger is being held here as the anonymous writer of a threatening letter to slain Arnold Schuster, whose tipster had denied killing Schuster.

The gravedigger was to be arraigned Tuesday at about the same time Sutton was put on trial for a 1950 holdup.

Schuster, 24-year-old Brooklyn clothing salesman, was killed near his home March 8. Just a month ago, on Feb. 18, Schuster had spotted the nation's ace bank robber and prison escape artist on a subway train.

The FBI arrested the gravedigger, William J. McKee, 61, of New York, Monday night and said he admitted writing Schuster on Feb. 22 that "your days are numbered for being a squealer on Willie Sutton."

Schuster received about a dozen threats before he was shot.

FBI AGENTS refused to answer newsmen's questions on certain aspects of the case—what Brown's motive in writing Schuster might have been, whether the gravedigger was questioned about the murder and how the FBI traced him.

However, he was reported to have denied killing Schuster.

Brown was charged with violating the federal extortion statute. In the neighboring borough of Queens, Sutton and two of his alleged accomplices were due to enter a heavily guarded courtroom for their trial on charges of holding up a branch of the Manufacturers Trust Co. for $64,000.

Special security measures include screening all who enter County Judge Peter Farrell's court.

Co-defendants with the 31-year-old Sutton are Thomas Kling, 45, and John de Venua, 37. Their arrests followed Sutton's by a few days.

Sutton, known as "the actor" because of the disguises he used in a number of spectacular holdups, faces life imprisonment for two felony convictions. He never finished two of his prison terms, escaping from Sing Sing, N. Y., and Holmesburg, Pa., prisons.

2 Major Farm Groups Split On Government Aid Question

WASHINGTON, March 18 — (AP)—Whether farmers should have less help or more help from Uncle Sam is an issue driving a wedge between two groups of farm organization leaders.

In the forefront of the fight are the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Farmers Union.

The Farm Bureau, generally regarded as "conservative" on economic issues, wants less federal activity.

The farmers union, which proudly espouses greater government participation in farming, has undertaken a campaign to discredit its sister organization.

In general, the Farm Bureau favors an economic set up under which factors of supply and demand set farm prices with a minimum of government interference. The union, on the other hand, wants the government to support farm prices at higher levels than now prevail.

The bureau wants Congress to reduce appropriations for many department activities, particularly for payments to farmers for carrying out soil conservation practices. This the union opposes.

Likewise, the bureau favors reducing activities of local farmer committees which now help administer farm programs. It feels these committees often are used for political purposes.

The union charges the bureau is siding with a "big business" attack on federal farm programs.

Strike Halts Work On Atomic Plant

PADUCAH, Ky., March 18 — (AP)—A work dispute stopped operations at the atomic energy project near here Monday. More than 15,000 workers were out of work.

A superintendent for the F. H. McGraw and Co., prime contractor, said the company decided to shut down after laborers kept walking out in a dispute about night shift hours. He said work will not resume until the contractor is assured a full labor complement.

Members of the Kiwanis committee who arranged for the special "career day" project were Richard Morris, Frank Marion and Bill Wyatt.

High School Pupils Have 'Career Day'

Kiwanis Program Gives Youngsters Essential Facts

Circleville high school pupils Tuesday were armed with essential facts which they will need in determining their futures in business or professional fields.

They were armed Monday during the first annual "career day" program sponsored by Circleville Kiwanis Club.

Culmination of two years of planning, by Kiwanians on a project of vocational guidance, the "career day" program featured discussion groups conducted by men and women who have made their ways in their chosen professions.

Dr. Lawrence Loomis of Ohio State university vocational guidance department opened the program with an address, encouraging the pupils to seriously consider their futures.

FOLLOWING the address, pupils attended discussion group sessions where specific areas of vocations were studied.

The local high school pupils earlier had answered questionnaires concerning 55 business and professional fields. Most frequent preferences voiced by the pupils were for military service, while the field of nursing was next high.

In all, 19 separate areas of vocations were selected for complete discussion during Monday's program.

List of the professions which were discussed fully during Monday's special program, along with the persons or groups who directed the discussions, is as follows:

Agriculture, Larry Best; auto mechanics, Jack Clifton; aviation, Warren Harmon; accounting and bookkeeping, Bliss College faculty; beauty, Capital School of Beauty Culture faculty; business management, Leslie May; education, George D. McDowell; engineering, Edward Grigg; homemakers, "Betty Newton."

Interior decorators, Mrs. Karl Mason; journalism, Tom Wilson; medicine, Dr. Ray Carroll; military service, two Army sergeants, member of WAC and member of WAF; motor transportation, Fred Bell; music, Richard Johnston; nursing, Mrs. Marian Cochran; photography, Cliff Beaver; theology, the Rev. Robert Weaver; stenography and typing, Bliss College faculty.

He's Not Indispensable To NATO

Ike's Letter Opening Gate For Presidential Campaign

WASHINGTON, March 18 — (AP)—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's promise he will "regularly re-examine" the political situation seems to leave the gate open for him to campaign for the Republican presidential nomination.

Most members of Congress who commented on the five-star general's letter to Rep. Hope (R-Kan) and 18 other House Republicans came up with that interpretation.

There was a difference of opinion, shaded by their support for other candidates, and few, if any, expect to see the general back in this country in civilian clothes before May.

In a March 10 letter made public here Monday, Eisenhower said significantly he does not regard himself as "indispensable to the success of NATO"—the North Atlantic Treaty Organization command he now holds.

This was regarded as a direct answer to some of those plugging Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio for the nomination—notably Sen. Brewster of Maine—that success of the Western European defense setup depends on Eisenhower's continued presence as its leader.

Asserting that there is "no question in my mind concerning the propriety of answering a clear-cut call to another and higher duty," Eisenhower said it was "an entirely different thing to leave a critical assignment for the purpose of increasing the possibility or probability of such a summons."

This recalled his Jan. 7 statement that he was available for the GOP nomination, but "in the absence of a clear-cut call to political duty" would not ask to be relieved of his command and would not join in pre-convention activities in his behalf.

Political leaders here are alert for any fresh hints of the intentions of President Truman and Eisenhower—the two "mystery" candidates for the presidential nomination.

It was considered probable the Democratic campaign was being charted in conferences between Truman and a national party chairman Frank E. McKinney at Key West, Fla.

Truman has not said whether he intends to run. A national committee official said in Washington the Democrats were anxiously urging the President at least to let McKinney in on his secret. They said the party chairman should have at least enough of an insight to give them private guidance.

In Trenton, New Jersey, Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll announced he will support Eisenhower. New Jersey, with 38 delegates to the GOP nominating convention, holds its preferential primary April 15.

Other happenings in the presidential kaleidoscope: Minnesota voters were holding their presidential primary Tuesday with Eisenhower backers pushing a write-in campaign. Only Stassen and Edward C. Slettedahl are on the Republican side. Sen. Humphrey of Minnesota, on the Democratic side, is a Truman backer.

North Carolina Republicans open their state convention Tuesday with Taft having 10 supporters elected as delegates to three for Eisenhower. Nine have not committed themselves. The convention will choose four delegates-at-large.

Taft opened his Wisconsin campaign for the Republican nomination by speaking in nine towns Monday, criticizing his GOP opponents and Truman's administration. Wisconsin's presidential primary is April 1.

Harold E. Stassen, covering much the same ground in Wisconsin, invited supporters of Eisenhower and Sen. Douglas MacArthur to back his delegates.

The former Minnesota governor said neither is entered in the Wisconsin primary but "my policies more closely represent their views than any other candidate."

THE REDS TRIED to remove Seoul from the Allied list and substitute its port, Inchon. They also objected to Taegu, an aerial entry spot in Southeast Korea. Instead they proposed Suwon, another air center situated on a rail and highway junction. But it is in West Korea, about 20 miles south of Seoul.

Allied staff officers argued that Seoul and Inchon should be considered a single port of entry in the armistice agreement. They also tried to get Pusan and Masan identified as a single port. Pusan, in Southeast Korea, is the major UN seaport in Korea. Masan is another port 30 miles to the west.

The Reds objected to both ideas. The Allies said the Com-

Poor Mom! Nutritionist Takes Crack At Her Kitchen Methods

NEW YORK, March 18 — (AP)—Long-suffering "Mom" takes it on the chin again—this time from a noted nutritionist, Carlton Fredericks, who claims many of the world's ills, from bad temper to ulcers, may be caused by Mom's home cooking.

Fredericks says Mom's fried potatoes and apple pie may be, over a period of years, as lethal a dose as any ever dished out by Lucretia Borgia.

Americans suffer from a multitude of ills, says Fredericks citing the American Medical Association's statement that out of every 1,000 Americans over 15 years of age, 976 will have some trace of anemia, obesity, tuberculosis or any of 20 other common ailments. Many of these, he claims, could be prevented or eliminated by correct diet.

He is director of the Institute of Nutrition Research member of many technical societies and a former university instructor in chemistry of foods.

He gives this advice to housewives who would feed their families well.

The first, which undoubtedly will please all husbands, is: "Lady, lay off the leftovers!"

Stale food, says Fredericks, never has the nutritional value of freshly cooked food. So cook only enough for one meal, and if there's any left, feed it to the dog.

He advises serving as much raw food as possible, such as fresh fruits and green salads.

Jet Aviation Notes Birthday

The birthday party is the dedication of General Electric Company's large new jet-engine research, development and production center. It was only ten years ago, March 18, 1942, that America's first turbo-jet was completed and placed on test in Lynn, Mass.

Harry Truman Writes He Is Sentimental, Lonely Man

WASHINGTON, March 18 — (AP)—Harry S. Truman, in his own words, is a sentimental, lonely man who sometimes feels the White House has turned him into "a two-headed calf"—a freak in the eyes of the American people.

Truman believes "there is no indispensable man in a democracy." But is he willing to turn over to somebody else the job he regards as the hardest in the world?

The President doesn't say, although he makes this comment on politicians in general—and he is proud to call himself a politician: "They never get out until they die or are kicked out."

A big $5 book full of these and thousands of other "unrehearsed private thoughts" of the 32nd President is now on sale. The title: "Mr. President."

William Hillman, Mutual Broad-

casting System commentator, is listed as the author. But some 65,000 of the 80,000 words are those of Harry Truman himself. They are from his leather-bound diaries, his private memoranda, his correspondence, his sometimes startlingly frank conversations.

This unprecedented—if uncritical—look into the mind and activities of a President still in the White House discloses among other things that:

Twice, at least, since he took office, Truman has feared World War III was on the verge of breaking out.

As early as January, 1946, Truman declared he was tired of "babbling the Soviets"—saying so in a scorching memo that rapped the knuckles of James F. Byrnes, then secretary of state for keeping him in the dark on foreign poli-icy developments.

He welcomed the nomination of Thomas E. Dewey for President by the Republicans in 1948 because he felt Dewey had nothing to offer the voters except a "warmed-over" platform.

And he viewed one of his own cabinet members—Henry A. Wallace, whom he fired—as a "dreamer" more dangerous to the country than the old German-American Bund.

This 253-page book, a best-seller even on the basis of pre-publication orders, adds up to a campaign document that the Democrats can use whether Truman seeks reelection or not.

For all its wealth of personal information about Truman, before and after he went into politics at the behest of the Pendergast organization in Kansas City, it is significant for what it leaves out as well as for what it contains.

Among the noteworthy omissions:

There are only fleeting and non-committal references to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

After World War II, Truman praised Eisenhower to the skies and promised to help him get anything he wanted—including the presidency in 1948.

Now, in 1952, Eisenhower is in the running for the Republican presidential nomination although not personally an active candidate.

And Truman, in the new book does not mention Eisenhower on his list of the "greatest generals" while saying Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, "tops them all."

Significantly, Truman has nothing significant to say about Eisenhower's chief rival for this year's GOP nomination, Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio.

Truman makes no bones of the fact that he was sponsored in politics by the Pendergast organization. But he says the Kansas City machine never influenced him as a public official.

"There is nothing I detest so much as a crooked politician or corrupt government official," he says. And he adds, speaking of the corruption charges made against his own administration:

"But the type of businessman who is a fixer is even lower in my estimation."

And he proposes that every public official—including members of Congress—whose salary is more than $10,000 a year be required to make public "exactly what his outside income is."

Truman's "cleanup" chief, Newbold Morris, is quizzing many officials in the executive branch about their incomes now.

The Truman-Hillman book will be read avidly for, among other things, the President's frequently uninhabited comments on other public figures and his accounts of his dealings with them.

He blasts John L. Lewis as "a demagogue in action" who "can't face the music when the tune is not to his liking."

He makes public the 1948 letter which precipitated his break with financier Bernard Baruch—a letter implying Baruch was ungrateful for favors he and his family received.

Truman's casual comments, sprinkled throughout the book, cover a great variety of subjects.

He speaks, soon after taking office, of the State Department's cautious manner of dealing with him, and adds:

"Evidently, some of the State Department boys believe nobody, not even the President of the United States, Ain't it awful! Must make changes."

Edward R. Stettinius Jr. was secretary of state at that time. He was soon replaced by Byrnes.

Again in 1951, Truman wrote in a letter:

"Some of the generals and admirals and the career men in government look upon the occupant of the White House as only a temporary nuisance who will soon be succeeded by another temporary occupant."

Truman himself regards the presidency, he says, as a sort of super public relations job—with too much time devoted to "talking to people and kissing them on both cheeks trying to get them to do what they ought to do without getting kissed."

On a more personal level, Truman says—also in a letter—that he has never voted "dry" in his life but that "some of the antics of the distillers almost make me feel like doing just that."

And, in a biographical sketch he wrote for Hillman, the President recalls he was given ipsecac and whisky when he had a "terrible case" of diphtheria as a boy.

"I've hated the smell of both ever since," he says.

Truman adds, in a letter to Hillman:

"I expect there will be those who will construe this (the book) as a political act. You and I know better."

Truman records that he has had

She contracted the disease while injecting mice and handling cultures prepared in the state's search for the source of the anthrax germ.

It was the first case of anthrax among human beings in Ohio since 1949.

Mrs. Brown was taken to a Columbus hospital Thursday night and released Monday, cured by treatment with penicillin, state officials reported Tuesday.

DR. HARRY G. Geyer, state veterinarian, said he had not reported the case before because he "didn't want to scare the hell out of a lot of people."

Geyer had been unusually reluctant in releasing data concerning anthrax in Ohio. It was not until Gov. Frank J. Lausche stepped into the picture last week that the public was fully apprised of the actual situation.

Asserting that there is "no question in my mind concerning the propriety of answering a clear-cut call to another and higher duty," Eisenhower said it was "an entirely different thing to leave a critical assignment for the purpose of increasing the possibility or probability of such a summons."

This recalled his Jan. 7 statement that he was available for the GOP nomination, but "in the absence of a clear-cut call to political duty" would not ask to be relieved of his command and would not join in pre-convention activities in his behalf.

Political leaders here are alert for any fresh hints of the intentions of President Truman and Eisenhower—the two "mystery" candidates for the presidential nominations.

It was considered probable the Democratic campaign was being carried in conferences between Truman and a national party chairman Frank E. McKinney at Key West, Fla.

Truman has not said whether he intends to run. A national committee official said in Washington the Democrats were anxiously urging the President at least to let McKinney in on his secret. They said the party chairman should have at least enough of an insight to give them private guidance.

In Trenton, New Jersey, Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll announced he will support Eisenhower. New Jersey, with 38 delegates to the GOP nominating convention, holds its preferential primary April 15.

Other happenings in the presidential kaleidoscope: Minnesota voters were holding their presidential primary Tuesday with Eisenhower backers pushing a write-in campaign. Only Stassen and Edward C. Slettedahl are on the Republican side. Sen. Humphrey of Minnesota, on the Democratic side, is a Truman backer.

North Carolina Republicans open their state convention Tuesday with Taft having 10 supporters elected as delegates to three for Eisenhower. Nine have not committed themselves. The convention will choose four delegates-at-large.

Taft opened his Wisconsin campaign by speaking in nine towns Monday, criticizing his GOP opponents and Truman's administration. Wisconsin's presidential primary is April 1.

Harold E. Stassen, covering much the same ground in Wisconsin, invited supporters of Eisenhower and Gen. Douglas MacArthur to back his delegates.

The former Minnesota governor said neither is entered in the Wisconsin primary but "my policies more closely represent their views than any other candidate."

Americans suffer from a multitude of ills, says Fredericks citing the American Medical Association's statement that out of every 1,000 Americans over 15 years of age, 976 will have some trace of anemia, obesity, tuberculosis or any of 20 other common ailments. Many of these, he claims, could be prevented or eliminated by correct diet.

He is director of the Institute of Nutrition Research member of many technical societies and a former university instructor in chemistry of foods.

He gives this advice to housewives who would feed their families well.

The first, which undoubtedly will please all husbands, is: "Lady, lay off the leftovers!"

State food, says Fredericks, never has the nutritional value of freshly cooked food. So cook only enough for one meal, and if there's any left, feed it to the dog.

He advises serving as much raw food as possible, such as fresh fruits and green salads.

Fredericks says Mom's fried potatoes and apple pie may be, over a period of years, as lethal a dose

Jet Aviation Notes Birthday

LOCKLAND, March 18 — (AP)—Jet aviation was celebrating a birthday here Tuesday and Wednesday—the tenth anniversary of the nation's first jet engine.

The birthday party is the dedication of General Electric Company's large new jet-engine research, development and production center. It was only ten years ago, March 18, 1942, that America's first turbo-jet was completed and placed on test in Lynn, Mass.

cheeks trying to get them to do what they ought to do without getting kissed."

On a more personal level, Truman says—also in a letter—that he has never voted "dry" in his life but that "some of the antics of the distillers almost make me feel like doing just that."

And, in a biographical sketch he wrote for Hillman, the President recalls he was given ipsecac and whisky when he had a "terrible case" of diphtheria as a boy.

"I've hated the smell of both ever since," he says.

Truman adds, in a letter to Hillman: "I expect there will be those who will construe this (the book) as a political act. You and I know better."

Seven Allied Questions Are Not Answered

Old Port-Of-Entry Issue Revived By Hedging Commies

MUNSAN, March 18 — (AP)—Communist negotiators proposed four changes Tuesday in truce-time ports of entry into Korea and said they could not answer seven Allied questions about exchanging prisoners.

The United Nations Command rejected the proposed port changes and said it would wait for the Reds to figure out the prisoner answers.

Brig. Gen. William P. Nuckolls, UN Command spokesman said he did not believe the port of entry problem would take long to solve. He seemed optimistic over the prisoner situation; said the Reds appeared to be really "studying the questions."

Communist staff officers tried to change two of the five entry ports the Allies had proposed.

They balked at Pyongyang, North Korean capital, as an entry point. They wanted to substitute Sinanju, about midway between Pyongyang and the Manchurian border. On the east coast they wanted to replace Hamhung with its port city of Hungnam.

THE REDS tried to remove Seoul from the Allied list and substitute its port, Inchon. They also objected to Taegu, an aerial entry spot in Southeast Korea. Instead they proposed Suwon, another air center situated on a rail and highway junction. But it is in West Korea, about 20 miles south of Seoul.

Allied staff officers argued that Seoul and Inchon should be considered a single port of entry in the armistice agreement. They also tried to get Pusan and Masan included as a single port. Pusan, in Southeast Korea, is the major UN seaport in Korea. Masan is another port 30 miles to the west.

The Reds objected to both ideas. The Allies said the Com-

'Pete' Dewey Quits Post In Tax Office

Addison E. "Pete" Dewey, 30, legal chief of the state department of taxation, has resigned his post to become attorney for the Commercial Motor Freight Inc. of Columbus.

A native of Circleville, Dewey was graduated by Circleville high school where he served as drum major for the CHS marching band.

He received pre-law training in Capital University, then was graduated by Ohio State university in 1946. He joined the tax department shortly after graduation, and became its legal chief in June, 1951.

Dewey is married and is a veteran of World War II. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Dewey of 220 South Scioto street.

Harry Truman Writes He Is Sentimental, Lonely Man

WASHINGTON, March 18 — (AP)—Harry S. Truman, in his own words, is a sentimental, lonely man who sometimes feels the White House has turned him into "a two-headed calf"—a freak in the eyes of the American people.

Truman believes "there is no indispensable man in a democracy."

But he is willing to turn over to somebody else the job he regards as the hardest in the world.

The President doesn't say, although he makes this comment on politicians in general—and he is proud to call himself a politician:

"They never get out until they die or are kicked out."

A big $5 book full of these and thousands of other "unrehearsed private thoughts" of the 32nd President is now on sale. The title: "Mr. President."

William Hillman, Mutual Broad-

casting System commentator, is listed as the author. But some 65,000 of the 80,000 words are those of Harry Truman himself. They are from his leather-bound diaries, his private memoranda, his correspondence, his sometimes startlingly frank conversations.

This unprecedented—if uncritical—look into the mind and activities of a President still in the White House discloses among other things that:

Twice, at least, since he took office, Truman has feared World War III was on the verge of breaking out.

As early as January, 1946, Truman declared he was tired of "babbling the Soviets"—saying so in a scorching memo that rapped the knuckles of James F. Byrnes, then secretary of state, for keeping him in the dark on foreign policy developments.

He welcomed the nomination of Thomas E. Dewey for President by the Republicans in 1948 because he felt Dewey had nothing to offer the voters except a "warmed-over" platform.

And he viewed one of his own cabinet members—Henry A. Wallace, whom he fired—as a "dreamer" more dangerous to the country than the old German-American Bund.

This 253-page book, a best-seller even on the basis of pre-publication orders, adds up to a campaign document that the Democrats can use whether Truman seeks reelection or not.

For all its wealth of personal information about Truman, before and after he went into politics at the behest of the Pendergast organization in Kansas City, it is significant for what it leaves out as well as for what it contains.

Among the noteworthy omissions: There are only fleeting and non-committal references to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

After World War II, Truman praised Eisenhower to the skies and promised to help him get anything he wanted—including the presidency in 1948.

Now, in 1952, Eisenhower is in the running for the Republican presidential nomination although not personally an active candidate.

And Truman, in the new book does not mention Eisenhower on his list of the "greatest generals" while saying Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, "tops them all."

Similarly, Truman has nothing significant to say about Eisenhower's chief rival for this year's GOP nomination, Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio.

Truman makes no bones of the fact that he was sponsored in politics by the Pendergast organization. But he says the Kansas City machine never influenced him as a public official.

"There is nothing I detest so much as a crooked politician or corrupt government official," he says. And he adds, speaking of the corruption charges made against his own administration:

"But the type of businessman who is a fixer is even lower in my estimation."

And he proposes that every public official—including members of Congress—whose salary is more than $10,000 a year be required to make public "exactly what his outside income is."

Truman's "cleanup" chief, Newbold Morris, is quizzing many officials in the executive branch about their incomes now.

The Truman-Hillman book will be read avidly for, among other things, the President's frequently uninhabited comments on other public figures and his accounts of his dealings with them.

He blasts John L. Lewis as "a demagogue in action" who "cannot face the music when the tune is not to his liking."

He makes public the 1948 letter which precipitated his break with financier Bernard Baruch—a letter implying Baruch was ungrateful for favors he and his family received.

Truman's casual comments, sprinkled throughout the book, cover a great variety of subjects.

He speaks, soon after taking office, of the State Department's cautious manner of dealing with him, and adds:

"Evidently, some of the State Department boys believe nobody, not even the President of the United States. Ain't it awful. Must make changes."

Edward R. Stettinius Jr. was secretary of state at that time. He was soon replaced by Byrnes.

Again in 1951, Truman wrote in a letter:

"Some of the generals and admirals and the career men in government look upon the occupant of the White House as only a temporary nuisance who will soon be succeeded by another temporary occupant."

Truman himself regards the presidency, he says, as a sort of super public relations job—with too much time devoted to "talking to people and kissing them on both cheeks trying to get them to do what they ought to do without getting kissed."

On a more personal level, Truman says—also in a letter—that he has never voted "dry" in his life but that "some of the antics of the distillers almost make me feel like doing just that."

And, in a biographical sketch he wrote for Hillman, the President recalls he was given ipsecac and whisky when he had a "terrible case" of diphtheria as a boy.

"I've hated the smell of both ever since," he says.

Truman adds, in a letter to Hillman: "I expect there will be those who will construe this (the book) as a political act. You and I know better."

Woman Who Lost Dwelling In Flood Receives Help

A huge community program was underway in Yellowbud Tuesday as friends and neighbors pitched in on a "house-raising" project.

The project, widely publicized and even coming under the scrutiny of TV cameras, was to restore a Yellowbud home which was washed away by high floodwaters this winter.

The four-room home of Mrs. Mabel Bosworth of Yellowbud was washed about 1,000 yards from its foundation into a cornfield by the flood.

Learning of Mrs. Bosworth's plight, members of Yellowbud church, persons in the community and businessmen and industrialists from Chillicothe voted to aid her.

The Bosworth home was dismantled Monday in preparation to being moved onto a new foundation Tuesday.

PERSONS in and near the Yellowbud community have purchased a new lot for the Bosworth home, relatively safe from future floods, and the home is being set up on a high block foundation.

Acheson Sees Success Ahead In Truce Talk

WASHINGTON, March 18.—(P)—Secretary of State Acheson said Tuesday he believes the Korean truce negotiations will be successful, but he cautioned against "either optimism or pessimism" in the present stage of the prolonged talks.

Acheson was before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to urge approval of the full $7.9 billion the administration asks for foreign aid.

Acheson's testimony became a quick review of foreign affairs in general:

1. The United States is "continually working" to get its allies to provide a larger portion of troops in Korea—without success so far.

2. The situation in Indochina, where the French are locked in battle with Communist-led forces, is "very serious" and will remain so until the French can put a large, trained native force in the field.

3. He is confident France, despite its recent government crisis, will carry out its commitments to the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, and that Germany will do the same.

4. All the NATO countries are taking steps to check inflation which, by increasing costs, is a threat to their preparedness efforts.

As for the bill before the senators, Acheson said he feels that needed items were cut "to the limit of safety" when the $7.9 billion measure was framed.

2 City Youths Escape Serious Hurts In Crash

Two Circleville young men escaped serious injury late Monday when the auto in which they were riding went out of control, ripped through a farm fence and struck a building.

The accident happened at about 8:30 p. m. Monday on the Kingston Pike, about four miles south of Circleville at the Harry Montellus farm.

Deputy Carl Radcliff said an auto operated north by Robert Turner, 16, of Cedar Heights road, went out of control as it rounded a curve.

The auto struck the berm on the right side of the highway, skidded across the road, rolled over once, plunged through a farm fence and came to rest against a garage.

TURNER and Walt Heine, passenger in the auto and son of the owner, were brought into Circleville by Hoyt Timmons and given emergency treatment. They reportedly suffered no serious injury.

Deputy Radcliff said the auto which Turner operated was virtually demolished in the mishap. Timmons, who tenants the land on which the crash happened, estimated damage to his property at about $150.

She Used Auto To Attack Pair

FORT WAYNE, March 18.—(P)—Mrs. Margaret Pereda, 33, is accused of trying to run her car into her husband and another woman on a downtown sidewalk.

A huge community program was underway in Yellowbud Tuesday as friends and neighbors pitched in on a "house-raising" project.

The four-room home of Mrs. Mabel Bosworth of Yellowbud was washed about 1,000 yards from its foundation into a cornfield by the flood.

Learning of Mrs. Bosworth's plight, members of Yellowbud church, persons in the community and businessmen and industrialists from Chillicothe voted to aid her.

The Bosworth home was dismantled Monday in preparation to being moved onto a new foundation Tuesday.

PERSONS IN and near the Yellowbud community have purchased a new lot for the Bosworth home, relatively safe from future floods, and the home is being set up on a high block foundation.

Acheson Sees Success Ahead In Truce Talk

WASHINGTON, March 18 — (P)—Secretary of State Acheson said Tuesday he believes the Korean truce negotiations will be successful, but he cautioned against "either optimism or pessimism" in the present stage of the prolonged talks.

Acheson was before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to urge approval of the full $7.9 billion the administration asks for foreign aid.

Acheson's testimony became a quick review of foreign affairs in general.

1. The United States is "continually working" to get its allies to provide a larger portion of troops in Korea—without success so far.

2. The situation in Indochina, where the French are locked in battle with Communist forces, is "very serious" and will remain so until the French can put a large, trained native force in the field.

3. He is confident France, despite its recent government crisis, will carry out its commitments to the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, and that Germany will do the same.

4. All the NATO countries are taking steps to check inflation, which, by increasing costs, is a threat to their preparedness efforts.

As for the bill before the senators, Acheson said he feels that needed items were cut "to the limit of safety" when the $7.9 billion measure was framed.

Truman Writes Book On Feelings Of A Man In The White House

to fire some of his top aides because they got "too big for their breeches," and he gives this account of a 1945 talk with former President Hoover:

"We discussed our prima donnas and wondered what makes them. Some of my boys who came in with me are having trouble with their dignity and prerogatives. It's all when a man gets in close association with the President. Something happens to him."

Something happens to the President, too, once the White House gates close behind him.

Truman records the dreariness of dining in state alone: "What a life!"

He speaks often of his enforced separations from his wife and their daughter—"our baby," he calls her, noting that Margaret doesn't like the term.

And, wryly, he records that on public appearances the President is stared at as if he were "a two-headed calf" or "Jumbo, the Cardiff Giant."

Truman says a President can't afford to be emotional—yet he admits he sometimes "chokes up" with sentiment—and calls himself "an old fool" and "a damned sentimentalist."

OFTEN TRUMAN talks of a favorite subject—his study of history—and he says: "If I couldn't have been a pianist—his first choice of a career—I think I would have done better as a professor of history."

Truman discloses that on two occasions—in September, 1948, and in December, 1950—he feared a new world war was imminent.

On the first of these occasions, after a meeting with the late Secretary of Defense Forrestal and other leaders, he reported "a terrible feeling" that the nation was "very close to war."

This was at the time of the showdown with the Russians over the blockade of Berlin.

Again, after the Chinese Communists entered the Korean War, Truman made the gloomy notation:

"It looks like World War III is near. I hope not—but we must meet whatever comes—and we will."

Yet in 1949, with the beginning of a North Atlantic Alliance, Truman voiced confidence that the world was "well on the road" to peace.

And he gave this, late in 1951, as the main accomplishment of his administration:

"WE HAVE prevented a third World War, and we have kept the American economy on an even keel. The Russians had the idea that after 1946 we would explode and then the Russians could have had the world to themselves. We have managed to keep that from happening."

Published here, for the first time, is the sizzling memo which Truman read in person to his then secretary of state, Byrnes, after the Moscow conference in 1945.

This message complained sharply that Byrnes hadn't kept the President informed on what happened in the conference.

It also assailed the "high-handed and arbitrary" manner in which the Kremlin was acting, and went on to say:

"I do not think we should play compromise any longer. I'm tired of babying the Soviets."

This memorandum was written a year before Byrnes—now governor of South Carolina and a leader of Southern opposition to Truman—left the cabinet.

Elsewhere in the book, Truman expresses satisfaction with the Republicans' choice of New York Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to oppose him in the 1948 election:

"All he (Dewey) can do is to make a 'warmed-over' approach to the situation with which the country is faced."

And he has only condemnation for a man whose name is blocked out in the text—but who turns out to be former Vice-President and Secretary of Commerce Wallace.

"X is a pacifist 100 percent," Truman wrote Sept. 19, 1946. "He wants us to disband our armed forces, give Russia our atomic secrets and trust a bunch of adventurers in the Kremlin."

"I do not understand a 'dreamer' like that. The German-American Bund under Fritz Kuhn was not half so dangerous."

Wallace, who has denied he wanted to give America's atom secrets to Russia, is not mentioned by name. But the President records that "X" spent two and a half hours with him that day. And Wallace, who later ran against Truman on a third-party ticket, was the only man who saw the President for so long a time that Sept. 19.

It was on the following day that Truman fired Wallace from his cabinet for making a speech sharply critical of administration foreign policy.

The book "Mr. President" gives no details of that controversy, however.

WASHINGTON, March 18 — President Truman, if he runs again, has laid down the twin reasons on which he'll ask for reelection: Prosperity and avoidance of world war.

In his almost seven years in the White House Truman has been belabored with criticism, which he says he shrugs off as an old story. He points to history and says it happened to other Presidents.

But, looking back on those critical seven years, he has had a chance to appraise what he's done, or feels he's done. Asked to summarize the most important achievements of his administration, he says:

We have prevented a third world war. And we have kept the American economy on an even keel. The Russians had the idea that after 1946 we would explode and then the Russians could have had the world to themselves. We have managed to keep that from happening."

THE STATEMENT is in a new book about the President, just published. The author, William Hillman, newspaperman and radio commentator, had a number of interviews with Truman, who also let him use his diaries.

Even if Truman doesn't run again the Democrats probably will use his summary—prosperity and avoidance of world war—as the basis for any campaign they make with another candidate.

It is so broad it would enable them to face in many directions, pointing to high employment as an example of prosperity, and explaining many actions of the administration as part of a broad policy to avoid all-out war.

Atlantic pact, arms for Europe, the stalemate in Korea, and even high taxes to pay for the arms and economic help.

In spite of the fact that he occasionally has strong fits of anger, the President has, or believes he has, a pretty calm and philosophic view of himself and history.

Hillman says Truman has made a special study of the criticisms flung at other presidents, and quotes him as saying:

"I don't let these things bother me for the simple reason that I am trying to do the right thing and eventually the facts will come out. I'll probably be holding a conference with Saint Peter when that happens."

"I NEVER GIVE much weight or attention to the brickbats that are thrown my way. The people that cause me concern are the good

"Our American political situation is about the same from generation to generation... I walk and swim and worry very little. I appoint people to responsible positions to worry for me. You have no idea how satisfactory that policy is."

Actually, Truman is more the author than Hillman, since 6,000 of the 80,000 words are from the President, either in the form of diary notes, answers to questions, or running commentary on events.

It's an uncritical book. Truman's vivid numerous insights into the President.

But, looking back on those critical seven years, he has had a chance to appraise what he's done, or feels he'd done. Asked to summarize the most important achievements of his administration, he says:

We have prevented a third world war. And we have kept the American economy on an even keel. The Russians had the idea that after 1946 we would explode and then the Russians could have had the world to themselves. We have managed to keep that from happening."

THE STATEMENT is in a new book about the President, just published. The author, William Hillman, newspaperman and radio commentator, had a number of interviews with Truman, who also let him use his diaries.

Even if Truman doesn't run

again the Democrats probably will use his summary—prosperity and avoidance of world war—as the basis for any campaign they make with another candidate.

It is so broad it would enable them to face in many directions, pointing to high employment as an example of prosperity, and explaining many actions of the administration as part of a broad policy to avoid all-out war.

Atlantic pact, arms for Europe, the stalemate in Korea, and even high taxes to pay for the arms and economic help.

In spite of the fact that he occasionally has strong fits of anger, the President has, or believes he has, a pretty calm and philosophic view of himself and history.

Hillman says Truman has made a special study of the criticisms flung at other presidents, and quotes him as saying:

"I don't let these things bother me for the simple reason that I am trying to do the right thing and eventually the facts will come out. I'll probably be holding a conference with Saint Peter when that happens."

"I NEVER GIVE much weight or attention to the brickbats that are thrown my way. The people that cause me concern are the good men who have to take the brickbats for me.

"Our American political situation is about the same from generation to generation. . . I walk and swim and worry very little. I appoint people to responsible positions to worry for me. You have no idea how satisfactory that policy is."

Actually, Truman is more the author than Hillman, since 6,000 of the 80,000 words are from the President, either in the form of diary notes, answers to questions, or running commentary on events.

It's an uncritical book. Truman's views numerous insights into the President.

LOSERS MAY WIN

MANY PERSONS will not be surprised if, at the end of a decade, this nation's erstwhile enemies—Germany and Japan—have both improved their economic situation to a far greater extent than this country or the other nations which fought to defeat them in the late war.

Both Germany and Japan are free from the enormous expenditures for military defense now being borne by the United States. Both countries are receiving billions in aid from America.

In Japan alone the United States is spending $2,000,000,000 a day to aid that nation's economy, while American servicemen stationed there spend an additional $500,000 a day. A similar situation prevails in Germany. This has brought prosperity to both nations.

Britain's situation is precarious. Both Japan and Germany are assailing Britain's commercial areas, offering competition which England is unable to meet because of its financial status. Sooner or later there may be serious disagreement between the U. S. and Britain over Japanese trade, while Britain's loyalty to China will be a factor in any settlement of affairs in the Far East.

MURDER AND INSANITY

EXAMPLES OF deterioration of the human mind are on the increase. In previous generations a single murder case was sufficient to excite the nation. Now murders of the most senseless and cruel character are routine in the daily news.

There is the case of the New York mother who strangled her three small children, one after another. Society is helpless against such twists of human character. Best minds in the nation are being devoted to a study of disordered mentalities, with little success except to reveal that insanity is on the increase, and there doesn't seem to be much that can be done about it.

Too many slayers are escaping the death penalty on the plea of insanity, temporary and otherwise. Granted they are crazy, it is also a fact they are murderers. One school of thought holds that no person in his right mind would kill another. If this theory prevails the death penalty will be abolished entirely.

Effective punishment of murderers may be impossible under a system of jurisprudence which seems to protect rather than punish the killer.

George F. Sokolsky's

These Days

A committee of the United Nations has been in session for several years, considering the problem of freedom of information. The idea is that the United Nations, by universal treaty, will set up standards determining the nature and character of freedom of the press for the entire world. The American representative on this committee has been Carroll Binder, of the Minneapolis Tribune, a competent editor.

It has been obvious from the start that the real objective of this committee has not been freedom but suppression of freedom of the press in the interest of governments. Whereas Mr. Binder has been laboring to explain that freedom means freedom for the individual, most of the European and Asiatic delegates seem to understand that freedom means freedom for government.

We have here a conflict in the basic philosophy of life—a conflict which has plagued the United States since Franklin D. Roosevelt missed its import at Teheran in 1943.

The American press does not assure its readers that its news is correct or true. It simply says: here is the way we present it and you can buy other newspapers and magazines; you can listen to radio and television. You can make up your own mind. The varieties of data and presentation will produce, in time, the truth.

Granted that sometimes the press is excessive in editorializing news reports, a habit into which the Associated Press has fallen with a prodigality of adjectives, actually no one is forced to do anything. No one is forced to buy anything; anyone can refrain even from reading or listening. Some of our professors even boast that they never read newspapers; and ants and bees and atoms give them all the news they want.

The United Nations crowd does not agree that freedom involves the right to do as one wills, provided the doer assumes full responsibility for his conduct. Carroll Binder once explained their problem in these words:

"These governments are engaged in a terrifying experiment to condition the minds of hundreds of millions of persons in an attempt to make them respond automatically to the commands of their rulers. In their hands information has been transformed from a means of enlightenment and understanding into a political weapon taking any form or shape required by the situation. It has become a knife to assassinate reputations, a drug to dull the senses, or a poison to instill suspicion and fear."

It is interesting that one of the phases of journalism that this United Nations committee wants to suppress is the peepholes on the grounds that they disclose the private doings of public characters. The theory is that character assassination is accomplished by telling what the great men do in private, as, for instance a report on what George Allen says to Harry Truman about Ike Eisenhower at a poker game. This should be strictly secret they feel.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR

THE Chinese regarded Laddell unblinkingly. He continued to puff lightly on his cigarette. "Now you wish to see this Goidy? Why not just give what you know to the police?"

"I don't have enough. If I can talk to her just for a few minutes I will have." He leaned forward. "You've got to get me in where I can get at her."

Kaiming removed the holder from between his teeth, scowled at it. "No white men are permitted to engage in Fan Tan, even to watch. It is the rule." He removed the cigarette from the holder, crushed it in a black ash tray.

"There must be some way," Laddell persisted.

The Chinese pursed his lips. "There is a way," he admitted. His eyes rolled up, regarded Laddell through their lashes. "It is, you understand, very dangerous. The tong controlling the game do not look with pleasure upon an invasion of their territory."

Tell me where it is. I'll take my chances.

Kaiming sighed deeply. "You understand that you will be going into forbidden territory, that I cannot guarantee your safety or even offer assistance once you enter that territory?"

"Let me do the worrying. You just get me past the watchers." "That will present no difficulty," Kaiming muttered. "I can even arrange for your guidance through the passages to where the game is played, and to the den beyond where you may find this woman in hiding. I cannot guarantee you a safe return. You still wish to make this trip?"

"The sooner the better. As soon as Goidy hears of Brin's death, she and Ceria may change their hiding place. Then I've got to start all over."

Copyright, 1951, by Frank Kane. Distributed by King Features Syndicate.

Kaiming shrugged. "If you insist on this foolhardy expedition, I can only do my best to help. I will arrange for you to bypass the guards. You will be guided to where the game is in operation. From there on, I can only hope for your safety."

Laddell stood up. "What do I do?"

Kaiming consulted his watch. "You will go to the Hat Soy Trading company on Bell St. There will be a person behind the counter who will expect you. He stood up, extended his hand. "I can only wish you luck."

There was a sharp bump from the door. Kaiming walked to the door, looked through, signaled for Laddell.

Outside the door stood Inspector Herley. He shuffled his feet impatiently, stared at the opaque side of the door, unaware that he was being watched from within. After a moment, he stabbed at the bell at the side of the door and the buzz in the room was repeated.

"You wish to see the police?" Kaiming asked.

"Not right now," Laddell shook his head.

Kaiming nodded, clasped his hands. Fah Soo emerged from the hidden door. "You will let Mr. Laddell out the back entrance," Kaiming ordered.

Fah Soo bowed, stepped aside for Laddell to precede her. He walked through the hidden door, which slid shut behind him. He was in a living room exquisitely furnished with priceless evidence of Oriental artistry. Minute bits of ivory and jade had been carved with such attention to detail that a figure the size of a fingernail was perfect even to the skin texture of the carved elephant. The furniture was massive, carved black teakwood and the walls were draped with brightly tinted silks.

Laddell followed the girl through four other rooms to a huge, barred door. "This will lead you through to another square," she told him. "You will descend the stairs, arrive safely on the street. You will not be bothered." She lifted the heavy cross bar on the door, opened it noiselessly.

Laddell walked through, found himself facing an old, paint-peeled door similar to the one he had entered through. He opened the door, descended a flight of rickety steps, passed through into the cool, fresh air of the street a block removed from the grocery store through which he had entered Kaiming's office.

A thin, stoop shouldered young Chinese looked up as Johnny Laddell entered the office of the Hat Soy Trading company. He peered at him through thick, leathery glasses. "You wish to see somebody, sir?" His voice was sing-songy, shrill.

"I'm a friend of Jimmy Kaiming. He told me somebody would be expecting me here."

The Chinese nodded his head several times. "I have been expecting you, sir." He signaled for an elderly Chinese to take his place at the books he had been poring over. "I have had my instructions. You will please come with me."

He led the way to the street, passed a group of stores, stopped in front of one store whose windows were piled high with a miscellany of junk. Inside, a man was sitting at a white enameled kitchen table that served as a desk, painting Chinese characters on an orange sheet of paper. He used a camel's hair brush held perpendicularly between thumb and forefinger. He glanced up as they entered, listened while the spectacled man told him something in liquid Cantonese, dropped his eyes, went back to his painting.

news behind the news

WASHINGTON, March 18 — Congressional carelessness is partially responsible for Internal Revenue "corruption" and for the kind of Casey-Morris ship deals which have enabled smart politico-legal operators to clean up tax-less millions on an extremely small investment.

The blame for Washington's crooked and unethical conduct does not rest solely on the man in the White House.

The remedies concocted by Congress for these conditions constitute an admission of that fact. Senate investigators have reached the private conclusion that the lessees of government tankers, which they subsequently disposed of at a huge profit that escaped heavy taxes, acted with the law. It is the federal statutes, as well as official morals, which must be strengthened.

Indeed, it now appears that the only charge on which the Chinese-American tanker group may be caught is use of the mails to defraud, and there is no certainty of that. Post-office inspectors, however, are following the proceedings closely.

DECEPTION — If it should develop that any of the negotiators misrepresented the purpose to which the tankers were to be put, in communications sent through the mail, they might face serious charges.

It seems that there was considerable deception behind the scheme in that tankers supposed to make profits beneficial to Nationalist China, carried oil to the Reds. But there is as yet no evidence that the "double talk" assumed illegal form.

That would be an extremely indirect method of hooking a former "new deal" Congressman — "Joe" Casey—and his shipping associates. In fact, it would tip off future operators. Therefore, the only way to prevent repetition of a scandalous operation is to close the legal loopholes.

PERFUNCTORY — Although Senator Walter F. George of Georgia has been a severe critic of Internal Revenue law-breakers, he admits tacitly that the committee which he heads—Senate Finance—helped to let the rascals and corruptionists get into key offices in the first instances.

All appointments of Internal Revenue commissioners and collectors must be approved by his committee and confirmed by the Senate. In the past, however, this task has been handled in a perfunctory and slipshod manner. If the appointee was satisfactory to the Senators from his state, he was automatically cleared by the George group and the Senate.

CHARACTER — Neither body made any attempt to ascertain the character, the experience, the business and political connections, or the background of the candidates for these important jobs.

The only test applied to them was political. In view of the fact that seven collectors have been convicted, indicted or suspended, it is obvious that this system has not made for efficiency or honesty in this service.

In the future, Senator George says, every man appointed or reappointed to a high post in Internal Revenue will have to appear personally before his committee, and justify himself on grounds other than political. He must produce references and even more definite evidence of his character, his ability, his experience and his devotion to the public welfare.

IRONIC — In installing this reform, the Georgia Senator admits, though not too noisily, that the legislative branch—or at least the Senate—must share responsibility with the executive and appointive official—namely, the President—for the current orgy of inefficiency, dishonesty and downright graft in the Internal Revenue and other agencies.

It does seem ironic, however, that the Senate must ask of Presidential appointees: "Are you an honest and incorruptible man?"

SHIFT — The compliments which Senator Estes Kefauver paid President Truman after the Tennesseean's triumph in the New Hampshire primary surprised and disappointed many of his backers. In view of White House enmity toward the man who first spotlighted the issue of corruption, they figured that he was repudiating his anti-Truman supporters in the Granite State.

But this Kefauver shift is part of a definite and deliberate strategy which, he hopes, will land him the Presidential or Vice-Presidential nomination. In his primary campaign speeches, Mr. Kefauver turned his fire on Truman. He intimated that the Missourian had been lax and slow in cleaning house. His New Hampshire victory showed its effectiveness.

LOYAL — His advisers, however, point out that he can get nowhere, politically, without White House support. He had already offended the hard-boiled bosses twice. First, by bucking "Ed" Crump, the Memphis postmaster, in winning the senatorial nomination. Secondly, by daring to enter the primaries before Mr. Truman had said whether he planned to run again.

Kefauver thought their advice good. He accepted their suggestions that, instead of being a Democratic gadfly, he swivel his guns on the G.O.P. After all, they continued, it will be a Republican you must face, if you hitch-hike yourself onto the Democratic ticket at Chicago.

Henceforth, Senator Kefauver will be a loyal party man!

"I don't have enough. If I can talk to her just for a few minutes I will have," he leaned forward. "You've got to get me in where I can get at her."

Kaiming removed the holder from between his teeth, scowled at it. "No white men are permitted to engage in Fan Tan, even to watch. It is the rule." He removed the cigaret from the holder, crushed it in a black onyx ash tray.

"There must be some way," Liddell persisted.

The Chinese pursed his lips. "There is a way," he admitted. His eyes rolled up, regarded Liddell through their lashes. "It is, you understand, very dangerous. The long controlling game do not look with pleasure upon an invasion of their territory."

"Tell me where it is. I'll take my chances." Kaiming sighed deeply. "You understand that you will be going into forbidden territory, that I cannot guarantee your safety or even offer assistance once you enter that territory?"

"Let me do the worrying. You just get me past the watchers."

"That will present no difficulty," Kaiming muttered. "I can even arrange for your guidance through the passages to where the game is played, and to the den beyond where you say this woman is hidden. I cannot guarantee you a safe return. You still wish to make this trip?"

"The sooner the better. As soon as Goldy hears of Brin's death, she and Cerla may change their hiding place. Then I've got to start all over."

Kaiming shrugged. "If you insist on this foolhardy expedition, I can only do my best to help. I will arrange for you to by-pass the guards. You will be guided to where the game is in operation. From there on, I can only hope for your safety."

Liddell stood up. "What do I do?"

Kaiming consulted his watch. "You will go to the Hat S'oy Trading company on Pell St. There will be a person behind the counter who will expect you." He stood up, extended his hand. "I can only wish you luck."

There was a sharp buzz from the door Jimmy Kaiming walked to the door, looked through, signalled for Liddell.

Outside the door stood Inspector Herlehy. He shuffled his feet impatiently, stared at the opaque side of the door, unaware that he was being watched from within. After a moment, he stabbed at the bell at the side of the door and the buzz in the room was repeated.

"You wish to see the police?" Kaiming asked.

"Not right now," Liddell shook his head.

Kaiming nodded, clapped his hands. Fah Soo emerged from the hidden door. "You will let Mr. Liddell out the back entrance," Kaiming ordered.

Fah Soo bowed, stepped aside for Liddell to precede her. He walked through the hidden door, which slid shut behind him. He was in a living room exquisitely furnished with priceless evidence of Oriental artistry. Minute bits of ivory and jade had been carved with such attention to detail that a figure the size of a fingernail was perfect even to the skin texture of the carved elephant. The furniture was massive, carved black teakwood and the walls were draped with brightly tinted silks.

Liddell followed the girl through four other rooms to a huge, barred door. "This will lead you through to another square," she told him. "You will descend the stairs, arrive safely on the street. You will not be bothered." She lifted the heavy cross bar on the door, opened it noiselessly.

Liddell walked through, found himself facing an old, paint-peeled door similar to the one he had entered through. He opened the door, descended a flight of rickety steps, passed through into the cool, fresh air of the street a block removed from the grocery store through which he had entered Kaiming's office.

A thin, stoop shouldered young Chinese looked up as Johnny Liddell entered the office of the Hat S'oy Yen Trading company. He peered at him through thick lensed glasses. "You wish to see somebody, sir?" His voice was sing-songy, shrill.

"I'm a friend of Jimmy Kaiming. He told me somebody would be expecting me here."

The Chinese nodded his head several times. "I have been expecting you, sir." He signaled for an elderly Chinese to take his place at the books he had been poring over. "I have had my instructions. You will please come with me."

He led the way to the street, passed a group of stores, stopped in front of one store whose windows were piled high with a miscellany of junk. Inside, a man was sitting at a white enameled kitchen table that served as a desk, painting Chinese characters on an orange sheet of paper. He used a camel's hair brush held perpendicularly between thumb and forefinger. He glanced up as they entered, frowned while the spectacled man told him something in liquid Cantonese, dropped his eyes, went back to his painting.

news behind

the news

WASHINGTON, March 18 — Congressional carelessness is partially responsible for Internal Revenue "corruption" and for the kind of Casey-Morris ship deals which have enabled smart politico-legal operators to clean up tax-less millions on an extremely small investment.

The blame for Washington's crooked and unethical conduct does not rest solely on the man in the White House.

The remedies concocted by Congress for these conditions constitute an admission of that fact. Senate investigators have reached the private conclusion that the lessees of government tankers, which they subsequently disposed of at a huge profit that escaped heavy taxes, acted within the law. It is the federal statutes, as well as official morals, which must be strengthened.

Indeed, it now appears that the only charge on which the Chinese-American tanker group may be caught is use of the mails to defraud, and there is no certainty of that. Post-office inspectors, however, are following the proceedings closely.

DECEPTION — If it should develop that any of the negotiators misrepresented the purpose to which the tankers were to be put, in communications sent through the mail, they might face serious charges.

It seems that there was considerable deception behind the scheme in that tankers supposed to make profits beneficial to Nationalist China, carried oil to the Reds. But there is as yet no evidence that the "double talk" assumed illegal form.

That would be an extremely indirect method of hooking a former "new deal" Congressman — "Joe" Casey—and his shipping associates. In fact, it would tip off future operators. Therefore, the only way to prevent repetition of a scandalous operation is to close the legal loopholes.

PERFUNCTORY — Although Senator Walter F. George of Georgia has been a severe critic of Internal Revenue law-breakers, he admits tacitly that the committee which he heads—Senate Finance—helped to let the rascals and corruptionists get into key offices in the first instances.

All appointments of Internal Revenue commissioners and collectors must be approved by his committee and confirmed by the Senate. In the past, however, this task has been handled in a perfunctory and slipshod manner. If the appointee was satisfactory to the Senators from his state, he was automatically cleared by the George group and the Senate.

CHARACTER — Neither body made any attempt to ascertain the character, the experience, the business and political connections, or the background of the candidates for these important jobs.

The only test applied to them was political. In view of the fact that seven collectors have been convicted, indicted or suspended, it is obvious that this system has not made for efficiency or honesty in this service.

In the future, Senator George says, every man appointed or re-appointed to a high post in Internal Revenue will have to appear personally before his committee, and justify himself on grounds other than political. He must produce references and even more definite evidence of his character, his ability, his experience and his devotion to the public welfare.

IRONIC — In installing this reform, the Georgia Senator admits, though not too noisily, that the legislative branch—or at least the Senate—must share responsibility with the executive and appointive official—namely, the President—for the current orgy of inefficiency, dishonesty and downright graft in the Internal Revenue and other agencies.

SHIFT — The compliments which Senator Estes Kefauver paid President Truman after the Tennesseean's triumph in the New Hampshire primary surprised and disappointed many of his backers. In view of White House enmity toward the man who first spotlighted the issue of corruption, they figured that he was repudiating his anti-Truman supporters in the Granite State.

But this Kefauver shift is part of a definite and deliberate strategy which, he hopes, will land him the Presidential or Vice-Presidential nomination. In his primary campaign speeches, Mr. Kefauver turned his fire on Truman. He intimated that the Missourian had been lax and slow in cleaning house. His New Hampshire victory showed its effectiveness.

LOYAL — His advisers, however, point out that he can get nowhere, politically, without White House support. He had already offended the hard-boiled bosses twice. First, by bucking "Ed" Cramer, the Memphis postmaster, in winning the senatorial nomination. Secondly, by daring to enter the primaries before Mr. Truman had said whether he planned to run again.

Kefauver thought their advice good. He accepted their suggestions that, instead of being a Democratic gadfly, he swivel his guns on the G.O.P. After all, they continued, it will be a Republican you must face, if you hitch-hike yourself onto the Democratic ticket at Chicago.

Henceforth, Senator Kefauver will be a loyal party man!

Robin Freeman Tops All-Ohio Cage Selection

Only One Top Five Man On Team Still In State Tourney

COLUMBUS, March 18 — (AP)—A quintet of "1000-to-1" shots took their place on basketball's throne Tuesday as they were named to the Associated Press All-Ohio Class A high school team.

The five were headed by Robin Freeman of Cincinnati Hughes, who popped 716 points through the hoop in 18 games for the most impressive record ever compiled by a Buckeye cager.

With Freeman's astounding total, and 612 contributed by Wells'ville's 6-9 "Bevo" Francis, the first string selections averaged 123 points per game for an 18.2-conest season.

Freeman was the midget of the All-Ohio at 5-11, Francis the giant, Len Roth of Cleveland Heights, who moved in as Freeman's forward running mate, stands 6-2, Don Nuxhall of Hamilton, at 6-4, and Bill Ross of Steubenville's unbeaten Big Red, at 6-0, took care of the guard spots.

the nod as leader of the third quartet.

Dick Vice, Middletown's fine playmaker, gained a guard berth on the second squad, giving state tourney fans another look at top-flight talent.

Won-lost records of teams did not enter into the selection of the All-Ohio players, individual brilliance alone being considered. Some of the members named to the first three teams were outscored by players on the honorable mention, or by some who failed to receive recognition of any kind—but it was the consensus of the hundreds of voters that those winning the top spots had everything.

The selections:

Johnson Trips Henry In Bout In Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, March 18 — (AP)—Harold Johnson isn't anxious to fight heavyweights despite his upset victory Monday night over Clarence Henry. Johnson only has eyes for the light heavyweight champion, Joey Maxim.

Johnson, the young Philadelphia who two years ago wouldn't have given a plugged nickel for his chances of ever fighting again, won a split decision over Henry, third-ranking heavyweight title contender.

One judge and the referee voted for Johnson 5-4-1. The other judge gave Henry the nod, 5-2-3. The AP card went along with Harold 5-3-2. Sitting on his rubbing table while photographers snapped a few pictures, Johnson explained his aversion to heavyweights:

"The weight is too much for me to make. Take tonight—I weighed 178, the heaviest of my career. Yet I felt as if I needed a few more pounds to really hit a man like Henry. I want a title fight with Maxim."

It was the third defeat for Henry in 36 fights and was a real blow to his heavyweight title ambitions.

Senior Ex-Champs Fall By Wayside

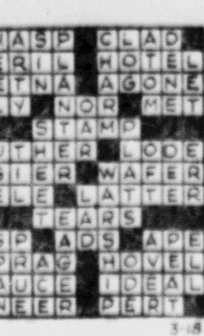

SEBRING, Fla., March 18 — (AP)—Former champions are having a tough time in the 18th annual National Senior Amateur match play golf tournament.

In Monday's qualifying round, James A. Foyne of Winter Park won with 71. Of the former titleholders, only Allen RANKIN of Columbus, Ohio, earned a clean shot at another crown. Rankin shot a 79, the highest safe qualifying score.

Sokolosky's These Days

Of course, the peepholes are, in a sense, dangerous—but their danger is not that they tell the truth about public figures—or even falsehoods—but that they build up synthetic personalities, by popularizing immortality. Such emphasis may distort the attitudes of children and adults with childlike minds.

Nevertheless, the peephole has his place in journalism because he does give the public the small items of gossip for which the human soul has a craving—even as you and I who maybe should know better.

In a free society such as ours, if this element of journalism requires a cleansing bath, public opinion will do it when it is ready.

Divorce, for instance, cannot long remain of equal merit with marriage and those peepholes will ultimately prosper who have a regard for human decency. The public, in a free country, not the government, will decide that.

The worship of government by so many United Nations delegates is a real peril to free peoples because they put their slavish theories into treaties, employing the Aesopian language of diplomacy. Once such a treaty is signed by our President and ratified by the Senate, it is American law and will be enforced by our courts.

From the standpoint of American theory, it is preferable to have a bad free press than a government-controlled press. Ultimately indecent journalism, untruthful, propagandistic journalism will kill itself by the ordinary process of sales resistance; but a government-controlled press leads to tyranny, to the enslavement of the people by their own officials.

John Adams, who died at 90, lived longer than any other United States President.

No Great Days For Xavier Irish

CINCINNATI, March 18 — (AP)—Ed Kluska, coach of Xavier University's football team, saw a lot of green on St. Patrick's Day—green football players.

Kluska, who coached the Musketeers to an unbeaten season in 1951, had his 1952 prospects out for the opening of spring grid drills and what he saw didn't foretell any "great days for the Irish" next fall. Only 49 reported—the smallest turnout in years—and only 15 of those were lettermen.

More Than Head Goes To School

CINCINNATI, March 18 — (AP)—Clarence Biedenweg of Fort Wayne declares physical health programs should be part of the total educational process, since "the whole child comes to school, not just his head."

Biedenweg is president of the Midwest Association for Health and Physical Education.

Today's Babies Have Good Chance To Reach Ripe Old Age

Expectancy Now At More Than 66 Years

Flu, Pneumonia Still Greatest Child-Killers

Children born today have a far better chance than you or your parents had of surviving the diseases hazards of childhood and living to a ripe old age.

Many factors have contributed to the longevity of today's population and the increase in life expectancy for the adult of tomorrow.

The majority of women today consult the family physician or obstetrician within the first two months of pregnancy, and return to his office at regular intervals for checkups. Earlier and more regular prenatal care permits detection of conditions which might endanger the life of the mother or the unborn infant, and measures are taken to overcome such conditions long before they have opportunity to wreak irreparable damage.

Other important factors are the use of sulfonamides, aureomycin and other antibiotic therapy for control of infections; widespread use of whole blood plasma in the wake of hemorrhage and shock; better economic conditions; better cooperation with the doctor; more attention to nutritional, vitamin and mineral needs of the mother.

DRAMATIC achievements of the past few decades in controlling diseases among children and reducing the death rate constitute one of the brightest chapters in the history of medicine.

The death rate from the principal communicable diseases — scarlet fever, measles, whooping cough and diphtheria — has declined well over 90 per cent among white children in the five-year average 1946-1950, as compared with 1911-1915. Scarlet fever, which has been decreasing in severity for a number of years, has become one of the mildest of the acute communicable diseases of childhood. Complications previously dreaded from this disease are largely controlled by the antibiotic drugs.

Pneumonia and influenza, which together still cause more deaths at ages one to 14 than any other disease, have declined in mortality to only one-sixth of the rate prevailing 35 years ago. Aureomycin has proved highly effective against all types of pneumonia, especially against "viral" pneumonia, a common variety. Perhaps the best single index which can satisfactorily measure medical progress over the past hundred years is the increase in the expectation of life at birth.

In 1850, conditions were such that the expectation of life at birth in the United States was only about 40 years. By 1947, according to the national office of vital statistics, this figure had risen to 66.8 years. In other words, in four generations the expectation of life had risen about 27 years, or by two-thirds.

THESE FIGURES gain significance when stacked against statistics on births. The nation's baby crop hit an all-time high in the six years since World War II, while the death rate reached an all-time low in 1950, and the 1951 rate may be even lower.

A report shows that 22.4 million babies were born during the period 1946-1951. At the same time, the infant mortality rate, in relation to population, showed a sharp drop from 67 per cent from all causes in 1940, to about 29 per cent in 1951.

Burial inscriptions of a recent Rome indicate that the average life expectancy of that time was from 20 to 30 years. Today it is more than twice that.

Every branch of medicine has made contributions toward making life longer and happier for today's babies.
